WEDNESDAY, July 26, 1749.

RATISBON, April 15.

ON the 13th inſtant, about 2 in the afternoon, duke Charles of Lorrain arrived at this city, poſt from Vienna; and was ſaluted here by a diſcharge of all our cannon from the ramparts.

His royal highneſs alighted at the hotel of the prince de la Tour and Taxis, where the principal magiſtrate of the city ſent a guard of grenadiers directly, upon the firſt news of his arrival, and went ſoon after in perſon to pay his compliments on that occaſion, attended by all the miniſters of the diet. In the evening, the principal Imperial commiſſary gave a very ſuperb entertainment, and after it, a maſquerade ball, which did not break up 'til the next morning. About 8 o' clock his royal highneſs took his leave of the company, in order to purſue his journey. Before he went, however, he made ſeveral valuable preſents to the domeſtics of the prince de la Tour; and amongſt many other things, he gave to the marſhal baron de Richlieu a repeating watch richly embelliſhed with brilliants; a golden ſnuff box, worth about 600 florins, to Mr. de Hurſt; to the valet de chambre, a gold medal; to the head cook, and the reſt of the domeſtics, he left 200 ducats; and 50 more for the grenadiers, who were ſent to attend him.

Paris, April 18. Some important diſpatches have been received at Verſailles from M. Durand, the king's miniſter at London, relating principally to the ſettlement which ſome private perſons at Martinico have undertaken to make in the iſland of Tobago. Our miniſtry is conſulting what pretenſions that crown can make to the Caribbee iſlands in general, in order to determine the right which it has in particular to that of Tobago. The envoys of London and Sweden have frequent conferences with our miniſters, which makes it imagined that ſome important affair is on foot between thoſe courts and that of France; and it's aſſured that the Northern powers demand the mediation of England and France. The marquis de Mirepoix, who is appointed ambaſſador at the Britiſh court, has agreed to lodge at London in the houſe of the earl of Albemarle, the Engliſh ambaſſador here; who will alſo lodge at that of the marquis de Mirepoix. The marquis d'Autincourt, who went to London to execute a ſecret commiſſion, it is ſaid, will ſet out ſoon for the Hague. It is aſſured, that the marriage of one of the meſdames de France will ſoon be declared at court.

We learn from Rochelle, that a ſhip from Bourdeaux, bound for the Cape, has been caſt away near the iſland of Rhee. The cargo was 300,000 livres, out of which only 30,000 or 35000 were ſaved; but all the crew, except ſix men, was preſerved.

Extract of a Letter from Hamburgh, April 1.

"The great difficulty of writing any thing with certainty from hence, has been the ſole reaſon of that delay of which you complain; as the chief reaſon of my writing now is to remove that complaint, tho' I muſt confeſs it is not poſſible to anſwer, with any degree of certainty, ſo much as one of the queſtions that you have propoſed. It is true that we are ſcatted, as you expreſs it, in the center of action, which however cannot entitle us to any extraordinary intelligence before any action is begun; but as to the advices you have received that things are much farther advanced than they were, you have certainly no reaſon to blame your correſpondent, as the fact is undoubtedly true, not barely with reſpect to the remittances of money here and at Dantzick, but on the ſcore alſo of the uſes to which this money ſeems to be deſtin'd; and if any lights I can give you will contribute to explain what from other quarters you have received, I ſhall communicate all I know in as ſuccinct a manner as I can, and ſhall be able in a poſt or two to write more copiouſly and clearly.

As for the armaments in Sweden, they are viſibly of ſuch a nature as ſhew they are not made without aſſiſtance from ſome other country, or purely upon the ſcore of ſelf-defence; what ſome people have publiſhed, and others have pretended to believe here, in reference to their troops in Finland, as if they were in no way capable of making head againſt the Ruſſians; and that conſequently to ſuſpect the Swedes of acting offenſively is an abſurdity, will appear in quite another light when it ſhall be conſidered, that if the Swedes had ever ſo great an army, they could not, as things ſtand now, keep them in Finland in the winter for want of magazines; and on the other hand, there is nothing at preſent more out of queſtion, than that how pacific ſoever their intentions may be, the very utmoſt force they are able to bring into the field, if without any noiſe put upon ſuch a foot, as that in a month's time it may be actually able to enter it.

The ſtates of the duchy of Courland are not to be accounted either haſty or dilatory in their preparations for an election; there is no doubt of their being quick enough, if they were abſolutely left to their own choice, becauſe their country ſuffers, as all countries muſt do from their not being under the direction of it's proper conſtitution. In the preſent ſituation of things, they ſeem diſpoſed to an election whenever preſſed to it by the Poles, merely to avoid an union with that republic, in the ſame manner as the great duchy of Lithuania, with which they are every day threatened. But as to the election itſelf, it is equally impoſſible that they ſhould be able to pleaſe every body, or to pleaſe themſelves; the latter perhaps would be very imprudent, and as to the former, if they gratify one of their neighbours, it would offend the other; and if they diſoblige that other, their election will be conſidered as made under force; ſo that which ever way they move, a handle may be taken from their conduct to begin a war in the North, upon a plauſible pretence.

Some there are who pretend that various ſchemes are in embryo, with reference to this election; and that to give time for fixing on ſome expedient which may pacify at leaſt, if not ſatisfy, all parties, it will be put off 'til May, if not to June. Others, who have hitherto been eſteemed perſons of the deeper reach, look upon all this as diſcourſe only fit to deceive ſome, and amuſe many; for in their apprehenſion, this buſineſs of Courland, tho' a matter of great concern, yet is only one point out of ſeveral in which the old and new ſyſtems differ; and therefore unleſs all points are adjuſted, it would be to no purpoſe to ſuggeſt any expedient as to this; and whenever they are adjuſted, we may venture to aſſert, that an expedient of this nature may without any great difficulty be found. Taking it in this light, we ſtill conſider it as the criſis. If the ſtates proceed immediately to an election, it is a ſign that both parties are reſolved to appeal to force; if it is delayed, we may conclude that the potentate whom it concerns are irreſolute; but if there is ſo much as a tittle of truth in the rumour of a new candidate, we ſhall then expect to ſee the clouds diſperſe, the horizon grow clear, and the ſummer make as bright an appearance in the North, as it will be ſure to do elſewhere.

Let me however conclude ſoberly and ſeriouſly, with aſſuring you, that tho' this laſt event is very poſſible, yet I am very far from thinking it probable, and that for a very odd reaſon; which is, that ſuch as openly eſpouſe the cauſes of the ſeveral parties in theſe diſputes, are unanimous in their ſentiments, that there will be no war, but that through the interpoſition of two powerful courts a negotiation will be ſet on foot for terminating all things amicably. Now if there was any thing of reality in theſe declarations, methinks that negotiation would have been already ſet on foot; and as it is very certain that neither of thoſe courts have ſo much as a miniſter reſiding with the powers which it is preſumed they muſt pacify, but on the contrary are known to be in a ſtate of coldneſs with thoſe courts themſelves, it looks as if a previous negotiation was neceſſary to make way for that mediation from which this pacification is to be hoped; which, as April is now begun, and the troops, troops every where in motion, has not a very promising aspect."

LONDON.

April 6. The honourable house of commons have defer'd the call of that house 'till next tuesday se'nnight.

The latest advices from Berlin import, that the report of the Prussian troops forming several camps, was without foundation, every thing being very quiet there, and nothing to be observed that had the least tendency that way. The order for buying up horses to remount the Prussian cavalry, has also been countermanded.

On Friday the lords of the admiralty put the Albany sloop of war into commission, in order to sail with admiral Hawke to Nova Scotia.

By letters from Dusseldorp of the 11th, we have likewise advice, that the march of the Prussian troops in the dutchy of Cleves, Guelderland, &c. who have had orders for some time to hold themselves in readiness, was provisionally countermanded just when they were on the point of setting out.

WILLIAMSBURG.

July 13. His majesty's ship the Hector, Capt. Matherson, sail'd last week on a cruize to New-York; but on the passage, sprung her bowsprit, and is return'd to Hampton-road. They spoke with a vessel from Curaso, who inform'd them, that two pyrates were off this coast, one of which is a ship, the other a brigantine, who had chas'd him, but could not come up with him.

His honour, the governor, with his lady and family, intend to England in the ship Carteret, Capt. Robinson, who will be ready to sail next month.

This day the hon. John Robinson, Esq; president, and the rest of the gentlemen of the council, went all in coaches, to wait on the governor, and presented the following address:

To the Hon. Sir WILLIAM GOOCH, Bart. His Majesty's Lieutenant Governor, and Commander in Chief, of the Colony and Dominion of VIRGINIA,

The Humble ADDRESS of the Council.

SIR,

IT is with the deepest concern we now wait upon your honour, to take our leave of you, as you are soon to depart from this government, and to manifest that sincere regard we have always entertain'd for you.

The reflection upon the long course of your wise and steady administration, from whence so many benefits have flowed to this colony, the lenity and moderation with which you have acted in your eminent station, raise in our minds the strongest image of human merit; and it is with hearts full of sorrow, we consider that we must shortly lose so good a pattern, as you have always proved, in promoting true religion, and the honour of god, and that we must be deprived of that influence which has frequently calm'd the face of public affairs, when ruffled, and appeas'd the resentment and animosities of private persons.

Power, which has turn'd the brains, and dazzled the eyes of so many, has by a prudent use been a means of distinguishing your character, and added a lustre to your private virtues; and his majesty, no doubt, is apprized how well you have perform'd your part, how exactly you have copied from his bright example, that whilst he was dispensing felicity to his subjects at home, you were making us the happiest colony of his dominions.

Be pleased therefore, Sir, to receive our most grateful acknowledgments, and the tender of our warmest affections, as the best return we can make for the happiness we have enjoy'd under your administration; and accept our sincerest wishes, that heaven may shed its choicest blessings upon you and your family.

In Behalf of the Council, JOH: ROBINSON, President.

July 13, 1749.

To which the Governor was pleas'd to give the following

ANSWER.

Mr. President, and Gentlemen of the Council,

I AM exceedingly obliged to you for your address; for the sentiments you have expressed in favour of my administration; and your kind wishes for me and my family: And, in a grateful remembrance of such acknowledgments, and the tender of your warmest affections, you may be assured, at whatever distance I am removed from you, I shall always have the interest of Virginia so much at heart, as to esteem every opportunity you give me, of proving the sincerity of my repeated professions, among the most fortunate incidents of my life.

June 15. At the court of Oyer and Terminer, this week, Thomas Seal, from Norfolk, was tried and convicted of robbing a House in that town, and was condemn'd to be hang'd. It appear'd upon his trial, that he was imprison'd on suspicion of a robbery, but found means to escape thro' the bars of the prison chimney, in the night, robb'd the house he was tried for, and cunningly got into prison again, to prevent his being suspected of the robbery.

Richard Sias, of Prince William, was tried and convicted of felony, and burnt in the hand.
